Creating a new table top game, need a modeller who will work for a reasonable rate to turn drawings and designs submitted into proper scale 28mm 3D miniatures. Will be a steady line of work even if rates are sort of low, you know you can always do a model or two to get some cash here and there and support someone trying to make a game.

really depends on what the game pieces are. Dragons or any other organic shape $200 a piece may not be unreasonable and I couldn't make it at all). You want something that can be described in more mathematical terms(see all my dice) then I can probably make them for you pretty cheap($10+ depending on complexity).

There is a big difference between organic and inorganic model creation time. Posting an image of an example of the model type would prolly get a better response here.
