With the changes in the new model page, it turns out that the page view count was removed and may or may not be back.

Whilst voting here may or may not sway the decision makers, it's your chance to show how you feel about the page view count.

Paul

I voted Yes because I feel that the page view count is an overall useful tool for relating page views against sales.

I would also like the number of views and favorites to be visible. For now, the co-creators are using the old code, so we can see those stats for co-creators by hitting "personalize".

Yes, definately, really useful to see which models are most popular on the shop, please, please bring it back!

Regards

Richard.

Noted!

Thank you, Paul. If I can get any more support on this one, it'll make it that much easier for me to make the case that we need to get it reinstated!

Voted Yes as it allows to see what models are interesting for others and what not - even for a zero-seller like me

Btw ... the model download is also gone, isn't it? I loved it as it allowed easily find out which of the 10 object versions I have actually was deemed good enough to be published ... without my non existing advanced archiving skills

Download appears when edit mode is on. So do other things, just read the full page, not everything is where you expect it.

Ah Thanks stannum - I found it!

If I want to download my model I just have to activate the public download, save that setting, and then I see a Download button. Cool!

After downloading I can deactivate public download again - that's particular useful for models where I really do not want public file download.
