
Subject: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by AmericanArchetype on Fri, 23 Mar 2012 02:24:43 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Soon to go on sale -- these N scale model railroading subway entrances (dome top) and exits (pyramid top) based on the subway kiosks used in New York city, primarily from the early 1900s to late 1950s.

Subject: Re: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by ana on Sat, 24 Mar 2012 00:30:36 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

These are a wonderfully nostalgic sight for me, and your photographs are beautiful! Gave you a shout out on this week's Friday Finds.

Subject: Re: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by Dragoman on Sun, 25 Mar 2012 12:14:37 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Very nice indeed. Impressive detail!

Greetings
Karl Heinz

Subject: Re: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by ScimDIA on Tue, 08 May 2012 19:53:17 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

This is really beautiful. I'm considering making some N Scale stuff myself. Can I ask you how smooth the model came out? Does it require any sanding or prep before painting? How fragile is it really?

Thanks for any help.

Subject: Re: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by AmericanArchetype on Tue, 22 May 2012 03:55:06 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I always bathe the FUD models in Bestine, a solvent cleaner that removes any residue. In the case of the kiosks, they're fairly clean so filling or sanding shouldn't be necessary. For other models, I use a very thin putty wash to fill the small grooves followed by a light sanding of the finest grit sandpaper available. As for how fragile they are....they are what I'd call brittle, meaning too much pressure will snap them. However, I've also dropped them off my workbench and not damaged them. With something like the kiosks finials at the top of the dome....that would snap off with the slightest bump.

Subject: Re: N Scale (1:160) New York Style Subway Kiosks
Posted by ScimDIA on Tue, 22 May 2012 12:36:13 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Appreciate the reply. Thank you.
